
Twitter bids, social media monetisation and control in volatile markets

It's Friday - and that means it's time to grab a drink and tune into Stocks Neat.

In this episode, CIO Steve Johnson is joined by whisky-naysayer (and Senior Analyst) Chloe Stokes to discuss the bid for Twitter, social media monetisation, and control in volatile markets. Chloe also shares her experience as a younger investor and reveals the stocks (and burgers) currently on her watchlist.

“As shareholders, we can't help but be disappointed. We bought [Twitter] because we thought the platform had a lot of potential,” Chloe tells Steve. “It's obvious that we think it's worth more than the bid, because we held it through periods where it was trading much higher and still thought it was worth more than those higher prices. So, we are definitely not happy from a price perspective, but on the other hand, we can't stop talking about it.”

Drink of choice: Suntory Toki

You can listen on:

Spotify

Apple

Buzzsprout

YouTube

Like what you hear (and what we're drinking)? Be sure to follow and subscribe - we're doing this every month. We'd also love your feedback, so leave a comment below to share your thoughts.

Thanks for tuning in!